

When A Mass Fatality Happens In Your Jurisdiction, Will You Be Prepared?

Or Will You Be The Target of Negative Press and a Public Outcry?

You are preparing to take care of the people who have been hurt after a disaster but what will happen when you have a disaster, in which many people die?

This most tragic type of disaster is called a mass fatality. The threat of a mass fatality event in your jurisdiction is real.

History has taught us that a mass fatality can occur anywhere, at any time. Your jurisdiction has an increased vulnerability to mass fatalities because of the recent rise in weather and climate related disasters, transportation accidents, terrorist threats, and widespread disease epidemics.

We hope you will never need to use a mass fatality response plan, but should you experience a disaster that results in a large number of fatalities without a plan in place, you could really be in trouble.

Expecting the federal government to handle the response for you, or putting a plan together after a mass fatality occurs — under the critical eye of the media and a concerned public — are not effective solutions. Waiting for help will undoubtedly lead to organizational stress and failure.

For $4,900, SNA International now offers a NIMS compliant comprehensive mass fatality response plan template that is written and vetted by mass fatality response experts.

Using SNA International's mass fatality response template will ensure public endorsement and accolades in the event of a catastrophic event. Can you and the public you serve afford not to be prepared when a mass fatality occurs?
